

Welsh Ffestiniog

Blue Grey

After being closed for more than a decade, Ffestiniog Quarry is back in full operation due to the huge demand for Welsh slate here in the UK and worldwide, producing the world renowned Blue Grey roofing slate.

Located in the heart of Blaenau Ffestiniog in North Wales, Ffestiniog Quarry has been producing slates since 1818, being quarried from the Ordovician slate beds laid down over 470 million years ago.

Ffestiniog Slate characteristically produces a thin uniformed slate with less texture than the Cwt-Y-Bugail Dark Blue Grey Slate, one of the other Welsh Slate quarries located nearby. The quality of the stone will allow production of roofing slates in a variety of sizes, and in the usual 3 thickness grades offered by Welsh Slate. Each grade of slate has a subtly differing character, but all have the intrinsic quality that makes Ffestiniog slate much sought after.
